TO THE EDITOR OF THE POLYNESIAN.

SIR :- Your correspondent "Student," underthe to correct an article in the Commercial: but let us, fair play-though the editor may be the most credule and reckless that ever wrote. Almost all falseho draw their vitality from a disjointed truth; and in a instance, "Student" by quoting a part derives as rious conclusion. He says, "The editor would he the distinction of caste on the ground of color." forced result he gets from the editor's words, "Po eigners will not send their children to associate natives,"-by suppressing the words "not because the are worse than themselves, but because they do wish their children to learn native phrases and habits So far for honesty. His enlightenment on the present and former state of the Royal School is of the state conscientious construction in confusing things esse tially different, and then concocting an absurdity.

If foreigners were inclined to try the experiment a small scale, of education, with a large control proportion of their own class in the mixture, which reason could that furnish to this student of college log that they must therefore be inconsistent in not conta uing the experiment with the proportion reversed? he had asked his elders, they would have told is better. We are, I suppose, to believe such a writer. this, that "If the town residents had come with m character there would have been no danger"-thou it is well known that those who did go, have (how of is not known) blu-hed to the ears at the language a actions of some of that class, who were not before of moral improprieties, and could not be expected perceive in school lessons, in so short a time, the trary of the teachings of a long prior home education

I admit with him there ought to be nothing dispeaging in color-but must insist that there is someth in moral "habits and phrases," which he convenient overlooked in his criticism.

His claim for all the credit to the Mission class sustaining the school, and his rebuke to the others, it not improving their chance, I can denominate nothing else than a brazen gratuity. How many of his or class did so after the danger formidably increased from the change, set in? the change itself being created in their withdrawment! If the town class did not follow them to Punahou, he knows, or ought to know, the the greater part could not-they were without the cilities and advantages of Missionaries' children.

There is too much of the spirit "I thank Thee I not as others are:" the element which brought the fathers to these shores is but dimly represented by rude offishness and disdainful contempt too often hibited to the "outside barbarians" by the privileg javeniles. Is there not an identity between this profit ising youth, and one who some time ago, took up himself to lecture a large audience on the criminal a of all his forefathers, in being found guilty, after lengthy trial of the world's duration, of partaking the juice of the grape? but failing to take with his the tee-total Bible-not having yet found a power-preto complete it-his profound arguments were though wanting in sufficient authority to bring the audience

I am sorry to see the son of Mr. Bingham begin incipient acquaintance here, by sprinkling bitters in the sentiments of his father-in going out of his way announce his solemn condemnation of a "son of Brid ain," whose crime probably would not have been u derstood had he belonged to another country. Detail ing every artificial medium of observation, and taking a simple, plain and common sense view of the act itself such a reader would conclude at once, that, instead Cook gratifying his pride and vanity in being adom by such worshippers, he was resolutely bent on accomplishing the researches he had in view, whatever con rent he might glide into, and that he thought such w intellectual absurdities too nonsensical to become a bar to a high practical benefit-if he thought anything than to make an object of receiving divine worship receive it, it was as a means of a worthy object; while the probabilities are, that worship of such a natural was neither offered nor received-for if it had been the natives would never have attempted to kill a go a thought the most revolting and impossible that cou occur to them; but that he himself should original

Henry Stevens, of Vermont, agent of Smithsonian Institution in Paris, has discovered collection of four thousand letters, wholly in handwriting of Dr. Franklin. A great many them were written from Plassy, near Paris. not generally known that Franklin invented manifold copying ink and press now in such gene mercantile use, whereby a fac simile of each let is immediately transferred into a book of tiss paper. Franklin kept duplicates taken in manner of all his letters, public and private. I prime cost of the collection was £1000, but 14 Stevens went to the further heavy cost of have the whole of them sorted, repaired, mounted, handsomely bound in Russia leather. They indexed also. Many of the letters had become legible from age and damp, but such, carefully out on highly-glazed Bristol board, were pass under heated metallic rollers, with great pressu which has quite restored the writing.

TRUTH.

PATERNAL GENEROSITY .- Interceding Friend Will you not do something, Sir, to relieve the fortunate position of your son? He is at pres in the Queen's Beach, and-
